

Hadith Scholarship in Baghdad and Andalusia (2nd–5th Centuries): A Comparative Study of al-Riḥlah, Intellectual Networks, and Textual Canonization

Rahmadi Wibowo Suwarno, Universitas Ahmad Dahlan Indonesia

Mohd Khafidz bin Soroni, Universiti Islam Selangor Malaysia

Rosni binti Wazir, Universiti Islam Selangor Malaysia

Nur Kholis, Universitas Ahmad Dahlan Indonesia

Correspondence email: rahmadi.wibowo@ilha.uad.ac.id

Abstract

Baghdad held a strategic position as a center of intellectual brilliance and Islamic civilization, while Andalusia emerged as one of the most advanced Islamic civilizations under the Umayyad dynasty. This comparative study is crucial for understanding how scholarly networks influenced the development of hadith scholarship and the respective contributions of these regions, given the scarcity of systematic comparative studies on hadith studies in these specific areas, particularly between Baghdad and Andalusia. Employing a qualitative method with historical and comparative analysis, this research aims to examine the characteristics and comparisons of three key aspects: al-riḥlah, teacher-student networks, and written works before the 5th century Hijri. The findings reveal that scholars in Baghdad undertook al-riḥlah to Mecca, Medina, Kufa, Basra, Syam, Yemen, Maghreb, Khurasan, and Samarkand to obtain elevated chains of transmission (‘ulūw al-isnād) and leveraged the city’s central position as an intellectual hub. In contrast, Andalusian scholars conducted expansive al-riḥlah to the Levant, the Hijaz, Baghdad, and Egypt to strengthen their sanad and collect hadith manuscripts. The scholarly network in Baghdad exhibited dynamic mazhab interactions, whereas in Andalusia, it was hierarchical-territorial and predominantly centered around Maliki scholars such as Yaḥyā al-Laythī. Written contributions in Baghdad produced diverse genres, primarily dominated by kitāb al-rijāl and al-musnad, while Andalusian works focused extensively on syarah and transmission pathways of al-Muwaṭṭa’, establishing a dominant trend.

Keywords: Hadith, Scholarly Networks, Baghdad, Andalusia

Introduction

Baghdad held a strategic position as a center of intellectual and civilizational excellence in the Islamic world. As depicted in Tārīkh Baghdād, the city was home to numerous renowned scholars and intellectuals, adorned with magnificent structures such as mosques, marketplaces, and exquisite public baths.¹ On the other hand, for over 700 years, Andalusia in Spain stood as one of the most advanced Islamic civilizations under the Umayyad dynasty. During this period, the region became an ideal model of integration between culture, religion, and science, achieving remarkable progress across various fields. Cities such as Cordoba, Granada, and Seville emerged as unparalleled centers of education, innovation, and tolerance in Europe at the time.²

As pivotal centers of civilization, Baghdad and Andalusia each developed distinct scholarly traditions, including unique approaches to hadith studies. In Baghdad, scholars established rigorous methodologies to sift out fabricated or weak hadith, which had proliferated between the late 2nd and early 3rd centuries Hijri. Their focus on scrutinizing isnād ensured that each hadith could be reliably traced back to the Prophet Muhammad (PBUH). This approach demonstrated that Baghdadi scholars prioritized authentic narrations over mere rational opinion.³ In al-Andalus, the socio-historical context shaped a distinctive methodological framework. Although the Shafi'i school gained intellectual influence in the region during the late 3rd/9th and early 4th/10th centuries, the dominance of Maliki scholars such as Yaḥyā al-Laythī (d. 234/848) and 'Abd al-Malik ibn Ḥabīb (d. 238/853) remained unchallenged. The presence of the Shafi'i school prompted Maliki jurists to engage more seriously with ḥadīth literature, yet this did not fundamentally alter their doctrinal positions or legal practices.⁴

¹ Al-Khatīb Al-Baghdādī, Tārīkh Baghdād, ed. Bashār Iwād Ma'rūf (Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 2002), vol. I:440.

² Mahfudhoh Ainiyah and Agus Mahfudin Setiawan, "The Brilliant Legacy of Islam in Andalusia 711–1492: The Influence of Islamic Civilization's Golden Age on Europe's Renaissance," El Tarikh : Journal of History, Culture and Islamic Civilization 5, no. 2 (November 2024): 115, <https://doi.org/10.24042/jhcc.v5i2.23593>.

³ Jonathan Brown, The Canonization of Al-Bukhārī and Muslim The Formation and Function of the Sunni Ḥadīth (Leiden: Brill, 2007), 51.

⁴ Isabel Fierro, "The Introduction of Ḥadīth in Al-Andalus (2nd/8th-3rd/9th Centuries)," Der Islam 66, no. 1 (1989): 90, <https://doi.org/10.1515/islam.1989.66.1.68>.

The Scholarly Network of Baghdad and Its Literary Contributions

Baghdad was established during the Abbasid Caliphate under the leadership of Abū Ja'far al-Manṣūr (136-158 AH). The city's construction began in 145 AH and was completed in 146 AH.⁵ Originally named Madīnah al-Salām, the city was not initially inhabited by Companions (ṣaḥābah) or Successors (tābi'ūn). However, as Baghdad developed, the generation of tābi' al-tābi'in began to settle there, though only a few were recorded as prominent hadith scholars.⁶ Baghdad emerged as an intellectual center in the 3rd century AH. Al-Sakhāwī (d. 902 AH) noted that the city became the foremost hadith center in Iraq following the arrival of eminent scholars such as Hishām ibn 'Urwah (d. 145 AH), Shu'bah ibn al-Ḥajjāj (d. 160 AH), and Ḥushaym ibn Bashīr (d. 183 AH).⁷ Hadith transmission activities flourished, establishing Baghdad as a hub of hadith studies until the era of Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal (d. 241 AH) and his students. Its golden age was marked by the emergence of great scholars like Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal and Muḥammad ibn Sa'd (d. 230 AH), with 7,783 scholars recorded in Tārīkh Baghdād.⁸ The Mongol invasion caused a drastic decline in the city's scholarly traditions.⁹

Baghdad played a pivotal role in the development of Islamic hadith sciences, producing numerous eminent scholars who made monumental contributions. As documented by al-Dhahabī in Tadhkirah al-Ḥuffāz, the city became a gathering place for hadith scholars bearing the title Shaykh al-Islām. Among them were Imam Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal (d. 241 AH), Ismā'il al-Qāḍī (d. 282 AH), and Abū Ishāq al-Ḥarbī (d. 285 AH). This scholarly tradition continued into the 4th century AH with scholars such as Abū al-'Abbās Ibn Surāj (d. 306 AH), Ibn Mihrān (d. 375 AH), and al-Dāraqutnī (d. 385 AH).¹⁰

1. Aḥmad bin Ḥanbal (164-241 AH)

Aḥmad bin Ḥanbal undertook extensive scholarly journeys to various centers of Islamic learning, including Kufa, Basra, Mecca, Medina, Yemen, Syam, Maghreb, Algeria, ⁵ Al-Baghdādī, Tārīkh Baghdād, vol. I:375.

⁶ Ibn Ḥibbān, Mashāhīr 'Ulamā' Al-Amṣār Wa A'lām Fuqahā' Al-Aqtār, ed. Marzūq 'Alī Ibrāhīm (al-Manṣūrah: ār al-Wafā' li al-Ṭibā'ah wa al-Nashr wa al-Tawzī', 1991), 276.

⁷ Al-Sakhāwī, Al-I'lān Bi Al-Taubīkh Liman Ḥamma Ahl Al-Tawrīkh, ed. Sālīm ibn Gatr ibn Sālīm Al-Zufayrī (Riyāḍ: Dār al-Ṣumai'ī li al-Nashr wa al-Tawzī', 2017), 456.

⁸ Al-Baghdādī, Tārīkh Baghdād, vol. XVI:638.

⁹ Al-Sakhāwī, Al-I'lān Bi Al-Taubīkh Liman Ḥamma Ahl Al-Tawrīkh, 456.

¹⁰ Shams al-Dīn Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirah Al-Ḥuffāz, 1st ed. (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyyah, 1998), vol. II:15; II:149; II:123; III:23; III:118; III:132.

Iraq, Persia, and Khorasan.¹¹ During his travels, he studied under eminent scholars such as Ḥushaym bin Bashīr bin Abī Ḥāzim al-Wāsiṭī (d. 183 AH), Sufyān bin ‘Uyaynah (d. 198 AH), Ibrāhīm bin Sa’d (d. 183 AH), ‘Abbād bin ‘Abbād bin Ḥabīb al-Muhallabī (d. 181 AH), and Yaḥyā bin Abī Zā’idah (d. 182 AH).¹² His contributions to hadith transmission are evident through his distinguished students, including al-Bukhārī (d. 256 AH), Muslim bin al-Ḥajjāj (d. 261 AH), Abū Dāwūd al-Sijistānī (d. 275 AH), his son ‘Abd Allāh bin Aḥmad (d. 290 AH), and Abū Zur’ah al-Rāzī (d. 264 AH).¹³

Imam Aḥmad left behind a profound intellectual legacy spanning multiple disciplines. His major works include al-Musnad, al-‘Ilal wa Ma’rifat al-Rijāl, Su’ālāt Abī Dāwūd, al-Zuhd, al-Radd ‘alā al-Zanādiqah, and Faḍā’il al-Ṣaḥābah.¹⁴ His intellectual excellence was widely recognized by contemporary scholars. Imām al-Shāfi’ī (d. 204 AH) remarked, “I did not leave in Baghdad anyone more knowledgeable (‘ālim), pious (wara’), and jurisprudentially profound (faqīh) than Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal”. A similar acknowledgment came from ‘Alī bin al-Madīnī (d. 234 AH), who likened his steadfastness in upholding the Sunnah to the role of Abū Bakr al-Ṣiddīq in confronting the apostasy (riddah) movements.¹⁵

2. Ismā’īl al-Qāḍī Abū Ishāq (179-282 H)

Ismā’īl al-Qāḍī’s intellectual journey began in Basra, later extending to Baghdad, where he settled and engaged in various scholarly activities. In pursuit of knowledge, he undertook al-riḥlah to major centers of learning, studying under eminent scholars such as Muḥammad bin ‘Abd Allāh al-Anṣārī (d. 215 AH), al-Qa’nabī (d. 221 AH), Muslim bin Ibrāhīm (d. 222 AH), and ‘Alī bin al-Madīnī (d. 234 AH).¹⁶ Additionally, he studied under Qālūn (d. 220 AH), ‘Abd Allāh bin Rajā’ al-Ghudānī (d. 230 AH), and Sulaymān bin Ḥarb (d. 224 AH).¹⁷ He became a pivotal source of knowledge for many subsequent scholars, with his prominent students including Abū Bakr al-Najjād (d. 348 AH), Abū

¹¹ Al-Ziriklī, Al-A’lām, 15th ed. (Beirut: Dār al-‘Ilm li al-Malāyīn, 2002), vol. I:203.

¹² Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirah Al-Ḥuffāz, vol. II:15-16.

¹³ Shams al-Dīn Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A’lām Al-Nubalā’ (Kairo: Dār al-Ḥadīth, 2006), vol. II:15; Abū Bakr Ibn Manjūyah, Rijāl Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, 1st ed., ed. ‘Abdullāh Al-Layṣī (Beirut: Dār al-Ma’rifah, 1407), vol. I:30.

¹⁴ Al-Ziriklī, Al-A’lām, vol. I:203; Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirah Al-Ḥuffāz, vol. II:16.

¹⁵ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirah Al-Ḥuffāz, vol. II:15-16.

¹⁶ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A’lām Al-Nubalā’, vol. XIII:339; Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirah Al-Ḥuffāz, vol. II:149.

¹⁷ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A’lām Al-Nubalā’, vol. XIII:339.

Bakr al-Shāfi'ī (d. 354 AH), and al-Ḥasan bin Muḥammad bin Kaysān (d. 340 AH).¹⁸ He also transmitted hadith to Abū Baḥr al-Barbahārī (d. 329 AH) and Imām al-Nasā'ī (d. 303 AH).¹⁹

Ismā'īl al-Qāḍī left a significant intellectual legacy across various Islamic disciplines. In hadith, his works include al-Musnad, Ḥadīth Mālik, Ḥadīth Ayyūb al-Sakhtiyānī, and al-Muwatta'.²⁰ In Qur'ānic studies, he authored key texts such as Aḥkām al-Qur'ān, Ma'ānī al-Qur'ān, and Kitāb al-Qirā'āt.²¹ One of his ambitious intellectual projects was al-Radd 'alā Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan, a refutation of Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan al-Shaybānī's views. Originally planned to span 200 volumes, the work remained unfinished due to his death.²²

3. Abū Ishāq al-Ḥarbī (198-285 AH)

Although no records indicate that Ibrāhīm al-Ḥarbī undertook al-riḥlah beyond Baghdad, he was renowned for his active participation in scholarly circles within the city. For fifty years, he consistently attended al-naḥw and al-lughah assemblies led by his teacher, Abū al-'Abbās Tha'lab (d. 291 AH), without a single absence.²³ In addition to Tha'lab, al-Ḥarbī studied under several eminent scholars, including Imām Aḥmad bin Ḥanbal (d. 241 AH), Ḥawḍah bin Khalīfah (d. 230 AH), 'Affān bin Muslim (d. 220 AH), and Abū 'Ubayd al-Qāsim bin Sallām (d. 224 AH).²⁴ Among his most influential students were Abū Bakr al-Najjād (d. 348 AH), Abū Bakr al-Qaṭī'ī (d. 368 AH), and Abū al-Qāsim al-Dāraquṭnī (d. 385 AH).²⁵

Ibrāhīm al-Ḥarbī left a substantial intellectual legacy spanning multiple disciplines. His most celebrated work, Gharīb al-Ḥadīth, critiques 125 hadith from Abū

¹⁸ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirah Al-Ḥuffāz, vol. II:149.

¹⁹ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A'Lām Al-Nubalā', vol. XIII:339.

²⁰ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirah Al-Ḥuffāz, vol. II:149; Jalāl al-Dīn Al-Suyūṭī, Ṭabaqāt Al-Ḥuffāz, 1st ed. (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyyah, 1403), vol. 279.

²¹ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A'Lām Al-Nubalā', vol. III:339.

²² Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirah Al-Ḥuffāz, vol. II:149; Al-Suyūṭī, Ṭabaqāt Al-Ḥuffāz, 279.

²³ Abū al-Barakāt Al-Anbārī, Nuzhat Al-Alibbā' Fī Ṭabaqāt Al-Udabā', 3rd ed., ed. Ibrāhīm Al-Sāmarrā'ī (Jordan: Maktabat al-Manār, 1985), 162.

²⁴ Tāj al-Dīn Ibn Al-Subkī, Ṭabaqāt Al-Syāfi'iyah Al-Kubrā Li Al-Subkī, 2nd ed., ed. 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Muḥammad al-Ḥulw Maḥmūd Muḥammad al-Ṭanāḥī (Kairo: Hajar li al-Ṭibā'ah wa al-Nashr wa al-Tawzī', 1413), vol. II:256; Burhān al-Dīn Ibn Muflīḥ, Al-Maqṣad Al-Arsyad Fī Zikr Aṣḥāb Al-Imām Aḥmad, 1st ed., ed. 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Sulaimān Al-'Uṭaimīn (Riyadh: Maktabat al-Rusyd, 1990), vol. I:212; Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirah Al-Ḥuffāz, vol. II:123; Al-Anbārī, Nuzhat Al-Alibbā' Fī Ṭabaqāt Al-Udabā', 162.

²⁵ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirah Al-Ḥuffāz, II:123.

‘Ubayd al-Qāsim bin Sallām’s (d. 224 AH) Gharīb al-Ḥadīth, which he argued lacked valid sources.²⁶ His other significant contributions include Dalā’il al-Nubuwwah, Sujūd al-Qur’ān, al-Ādāb, and al-Zuhd.²⁷ Although occasionally associated with the Shāfi’ī school, al-Ḥarbī is more accurately classified as a Ḥanbalī figure due to his staunch adherence to the methodology of Aḥmad bin Ḥanbal.²⁸

4. Abū al-‘Abbās bin Suraij (237-306 H)

Although historical records do not indicate that Ibn Surāij undertook al-riḥlah beyond Baghdad, he successfully absorbed knowledge from numerous prominent scholars representing various centers of Islamic learning. Among his teachers were al-Ḥasan ibn Muḥammad al-Za‘farānī (d. 260 AH), ‘Abbās ibn Muḥammad al-Dūrī (d. 271 AH), and Abū Dāwūd al-Sijistānī (d. 275 AH). Furthermore, Ibn Surāij deepened his knowledge under Muḥammad ibn Sa‘īd al-‘Aṭṭār (d. 265 AH), ‘Abbās ibn ‘Abd Allāh al-Tarqafī (d. 270 AH), and Muḥammad ibn ‘Abd al-Mālik al-Daqīqī (d. 268 AH). He mentored many distinguished students, including Sulaymān ibn Aḥmad al-Ṭabarānī (d. 360 AH), author of al-Mu’jam al-Kabīr, and Abū Aḥmad al-Ghaṭrifi (d. 350 AH).²⁹

Ibn Surāij produced several significant works in the disciplines of fiqh (jurisprudence) and hadith, including: al-Radd ‘alā Ahl al-Ra’y wa Ahl al-Zāhir, al-Masā’il al-Furū’iyyah, al-Radd ‘alā Ibn Dāwūd fī Ibtāl al-Qiyās, al-Taqrīb baina al-Muzanī wa al-Shāfi’ī, al-Radd ‘alā Muḥammad ibn al-Ḥasan al-Shaybānī, Mukhtaṣar fī al-Fiqh, al-Radd ‘alā ‘Īsā ibn Abān, Jawāb al-Qāshānī, al-Intiṣār, al-Ghunya fī Furū’ al-Shāfi’iyyah, al-Bayān ‘an Uṣūl al-Aḥkām, and al-Furūq fī al-Furū’.³⁰

5. Ibn Mihrān (d. 375 AH)

Ibn Mihrān undertook al-riḥlah to various centers of Islamic learning. In Iraq, he studied under prominent hadith scholars such as Abū al-Qāsim al-Baghawī (d. 317 AH), Muḥammad ibn Muḥammad al-Bāghindī (d. 312 AH), and Abū ‘Urūbah al-Ḥarrānī (d. 280 AH).³¹ He also sought knowledge from Abū Muḥammad ibn Sa‘īd, Abū al-Ḥasan ibn

²⁶ Al-Anbārī, Nuzhat Al-Alibbā’ Fī Ṭabaqāt Al-Udabā’, 162.

²⁷ Al-Subkī, Ṭabaqāt Al-Syāfi’iyyah Al-Kubrā Li Al-Subkī, II:256; Muflīh, Al-Maqṣad Al-Arsyad Fī Zikr Aṣḥāb Al-Imām Aḥmad, I:212.

²⁸ Al-Subkī, Ṭabaqāt Al-Syāfi’iyyah Al-Kubrā Li Al-Subkī, vol. II:256.

²⁹ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirah Al-Ḥuffāz, vol. III:23; Al-Bagdādī, Tārīkh Baghdād, vol. V:472.

³⁰ Al-Bagdādī, Tārīkh Baghdād, vol. V:471.

³¹ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A’Lām Al-Nubalā’, vol. XVI:335.

Jawsa, and Abū Ḥāmid ibn Bilāl (d. 305 AH) in other regions. After an intensive period of study, Ibn Mihrān resided in Samarkand for thirty years before settling in Makkah until his death.³² Among his notable students were al-Ḥākim al-Naysābūrī (d. 405 AH), Abū al-‘Alā’ al-Wāsiṭī (d. 376 AH), ‘Alī ibn Muḥammad al-Ḥaḍā’, and Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad al-Kātib. Al-Ḥākim al-Naysābūrī recounted the difficulty of meeting Ibn Mihrān due to the latter’s frequent seclusion for worship. They eventually met in Baghdad through the mediation of Abū Naṣr al-Malāḥimī (d. 377 AH).³³

Ibn Mihrān left behind significant contributions in hadith, most notably al-Musnad al-Kabīr ‘alā al-Rijāl.³⁴ Additionally, he compiled several hadith collections organized by teachers and thematic categories. Ibn Abī al-Fawāris noted that Ibn Mihrān authored numerous other works, though not all titles have been fully identified.³⁵

6. Al-Dāraquṭnī (306-385 H)

Al-Dāraquṭnī undertook al-riḥlah to various centers of Islamic learning. During his early education, he studied in Baghdad, Basra, Kufa, and Wāsiṭ under eminent scholars such as Abū al-Qāsim al-Baghawī (d. 317 AH), Ibn Abī Dāwūd (d. 316 AH), Ibn Sa‘īd, and Muḥammad ibn Hārūn al-Ḥaḍramī.³⁶ As an adult, he extended his journeys to Syam and Egypt, where he collaborated with Ibn Ḥanzabah (d. 391 AH), the vizier of Kāfūr al-Ikhshīdī, in compiling a al-Musnad.³⁷

Among his most influential students were al-Ḥākim al-Naysābūrī (d. 405 AH), Abū Nu‘aym al-Iṣbahānī (d. 430 AH), Abū Ḥāmid al-Isfarā‘īnī (d. 406 AH), Abū Bakr al-Barqānī (d. 425 AH), and ‘Abd al-Ghanī al-Azdī (d. 409 AH). Al-Ḥākim al-Naysābūrī asserted that his teacher was the sole scholar of his time to possess profound and exhaustive expertise in ‘ilal al-ḥadīth.³⁸ Al-Dāraquṭnī left behind seminal works across multiple disciplines, including al-Sunan, which became a primary reference for the Shāfi‘ī school.³⁹ In hadith criticism, he authored al-‘Ilal al-Wāridah fī al-Aḥādīth al-

³² Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirah Al-Ḥuffāz, vol. III:118.

³³ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A‘lām Al-Nubalā’, vol. XVI:336.

³⁴ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirah Al-Ḥuffāz, vol. III:118.

³⁵ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A‘lām Al-Nubalā’, vol. XVI:336.

³⁶ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirah Al-Ḥuffāz, vol. III:132.

³⁷ Al-Ziriklī, Al-A‘lām, vol. IV:314.

³⁸ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirah Al-Ḥuffāz, vol. III:132.

³⁹ Al-Subkī, Ṭabaqāt Al-Syāfi‘īyah Al-Kubrā Li Al-Subkī, vol. III:462.

Nabawiyyah, al-Mu'talif wa al-Mukhtalif, and al-Ḍu'afā'. His contributions also extended to qirā'āt studies through Kitāb al-Qirā'āt.⁴⁰ In addition to the aforementioned renowned scholars, other prominent hadith scholars in Baghdad played significant roles in the development of hadith studies. Their biographical and bibliographical details are summarized in the following table.

Table 1: Biographical and bibliographical

Name	Major Works
Abū Nu'aym al-Faḍl bin Dukayn (130-219 AH) ⁴¹	Al-Tārīkh
'Affān bin Muslim al-Ṣaffār (134-220 AH) ⁴²	Juz' fī al-Ḥadīth Riwayah al-Ḥākim Abī al-Faḍl Sulaymān ibn Ḥamzah ibn Aḥmad al-Maqdisī 'anhu Ṣaḥā'if 'Affān ibn Muslim
Abī Khāzim Abī Mu'āwiyah al-Sulamī (104-183 AH) ⁴³	Al-Tafsīr, al-Sunan al-Maghāzī
Yahyā bin Ma'īn (158- 233 AH) ⁴⁴	Al-Tārīkh wa al-'Ilal, Ma'rifat al-Rijāl, al-Kunā wa al-Asmā'
'Alī bin al-Madīnī (161-234 AH) ⁴⁵	Al-Asmā' wa Al-Kunā, al-Dhu'afā', al-Mudallisūn, Awwalu Man Faḥaṣa 'an al-Rijāl, al-Thabaqāt, Man Rawā 'Am Man Lam Yarahu, 'Ilal Al-Musnad, al-'Ilal min Riwayati Ismā'il al-Qāḍī, 'Ilal Ḥadīth Ibn 'Uyainah, Man Lā Yuḥtaju Bihi wa Lā Yusqaṭ
Ibn Abi Khaythamah (185-279 AH) ⁴⁶	Al-Tārīkh al-Kabīr
'Amr bin 'Alī ash-Shayrafī	Al-Tārīkh

⁴⁰ Al-Ziriklī, Al-A'lām, vol. IV:314.

⁴¹ Abū Yūsuf Ya'qūb ibn Sufyān Al-Fasawī, Al-Ma'rifah Wa Al-Tārīkh, 1st ed., ed. Akram Ḍiyā' Al-'Umarī (Baghdad: Maṭba'at al-Irsyād, 1974), vol. I:47.

⁴² Aḥmad Ṭūrān Ballūṭ 'Alī Riḍā Ballūṭ, Mu'jam Tārīkh Al-Turās Al-Islāmī Fī Maktabāt Al-'Ālam Al-Makḥṭūṭāt Wa Al-Maṭbū'Āt, ed. Dār Al-'Aqabah (Turki, 2001), vol. II:1342.

⁴³ Al-Ziriklī, Al-A'lām, vol. VIII:89.

⁴⁴ Al-Ziriklī, vol. VIII:173.

⁴⁵ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A'lām Al-Nubalā', vol. XI:60.

⁴⁶ Al-Bagdādī, Tārīkh Baghdād, vol. V:266.

al-Fallās (d. 249 AH) ⁴⁷
Abū Bakr al-Marwazī (d. 275 AH) ⁴⁸	Akhhbār al-Syuyūkh wa Akhlāquhum Kitāb al-Wara'
Al-'Abbās ad-Dūrī (173-271 AH) ⁴⁹	Kitāb al-Rijāl
'Abd Allāh bin Aḥmad bin Ḥanbal (213-290 AH) ⁵⁰	Al-Zawā'id 'alā Kitāb Az-Zuhd li Abīhi, Zawā'id Al-Musnad, Musnad Ahl al-Bayt, al-Šulāsiyyāt
Abū Bakr al-Khallāl (234-331 AH) ⁵¹	Tafsīr al-Gharīb, Ṭabaqāt Aṣḥāb ibn Ḥanbal, al-Ḥath 'alā al-Tijārah wa al-Šinā'ah wa al-'Amal, al-Sunnah, al-'Ilal, al-Jāmi' li 'Ulūm al-Imām Aḥmad
al-Qāḍī al-Muḥāmilī (235-330 AH) ⁵²	Amālī al-Maḥāmilī
Abū Bakr al-Ājurri (d. 360 AH) ⁵³	Akhlāq al-'Ulamā', Kitāb al-Syarī'ah, Juz'un fīhi Thamānūn Ḥadītsan 'an Thamānīn Syaikhān, Akhhbār 'Umar ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz, Akhlāq Ḥamalah al-Qur'ān, Kitāb al-Arba'in Ḥadītsan, al-Naṣīḥah
Ibn Shāhīn (297-385 AH) ⁵⁴	Al-Sunnah, al-Tafsīr, Tārīkh Asmā's al-Šiqāt mimman Nuqila 'anhum al-'Ilm, Nasikh al-Ḥadīth wa Mansūkhuh, al-Targhīb fī Faḍā'il al-A'māl, Mu'jam al-Syuyūkh, Kasyf al-Mamālik
Al-Barqānī (336-425 AH) ⁵⁵	Musnad al-Kabīr, al-Takhrīj li Ṣaḥīḥ al-Ḥadīth, Kitāb al-Muṣāfahah

⁴⁷ Al-Bagdādī, vol. III:20.

⁴⁸ 'Alī Riḍā Ballūṭ, Mu'jam Tārīkh Al-Turās Al-Islāmī Fī Maktabāt Al-'Ālam Al-Makhtūṭāt Wa Al-Maṭbū'Āt, vol. I:404.

⁴⁹ Al-Ziriklī, Al-A'lām, vol. III:265.

⁵⁰ Al-Ziriklī, vol. IV:65.

⁵¹ Al-Ziriklī, vol. I:206.

⁵² Al-Ziriklī, vol. II:234.

⁵³ Al-Ziriklī, vol. VI:97.

⁵⁴ Al-Ziriklī, vol. V:40.

⁵⁵ Al-Ziriklī, vol. I:212; Ḥājī Khalīfah, Sullam Al-Wuṣūl Ilā Ṭabaqāt Al-Fuḥūl, ed. Maḥmūd 'Abd al-Qādir Al-Arnā'ūṭ (Istanbul: Maktabat IRSICA, 2010), vol. I:201.

'Abd al-Qāhir al-Baghdādī (d. 429 AH) ⁵⁶	Uṣūl al-Dīn, al-Farq bayn al-Firaq, al-Nāsikh wa al-Mansūkh, Tafsīr Asmā' Allāh al-Ḥusnā, al-Takmilah fī al-Ḥisāb, Ta'wīl al-Mutasyābihāt fī al-Akhhbār wa al-Āyāt, al-Milal wa al-Niḥal, Faḍā'ih al-Qadariyyah, Faḍā'ih al-Mu'tazilah
--	---

The study of hadith in Baghdad, when examined through its primary aspects al-riḥlah, teacher-student networks, and literary productions, reveals that most scholars undertook journeys to various centers of Islamic learning. Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal (d. 241 AH) pursued knowledge in Kufa, Basra, Syam, Yemen, North Africa (al-Maghrib), and Khorasan. Ibn Mihrān (d. 375 AH) studied in Iraq, Samarkand, and Mecca, while al-Dāraqūṭnī (d. 385 AH) traveled to Basra, Kufa, Syria, and Egypt. However, some scholars like Abū Ishāq al-Ḥarbī (d. 285 AH) focused on local Baghdad networks by intensively attending scholarly circles for 50 years, whereas Ibn Surāij (d. 306 AH) benefited from visiting scholars like Abū Dāwūd al-Sijistānī to Baghdad. The primary objectives of these travels were to obtain elevated chains of transmission ('ulūw al-isnād) and study under eminent authorities, as exemplified by Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal who studied under Sufyān ibn 'Uyaynah in Mecca.

The transmission network of hadith scholarship in Baghdad developed through strong, cross-madhab teacher-student relationships. In the early generations, prominent hadith scholars like Shu'bah ibn al-Ḥajjāj (d. 160 AH) and Ḥushaym ibn Bashīr (d. 183 AH) remained primary references until the 3rd century AH. This tradition continued through their students, such as Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal (d. 241 AH) who trained renowned transmitters including al-Bukhārī, Muslim ibn al-Ḥajjāj, and Abū Dāwūd. Cross-madhab transmission became characteristic of these networks. Al-Dāraqūṭnī (d. 385 AH), for instance, taught eminent scholars like al-Ḥākim al-Naysābūrī and Abū Nu'aym al-Iṣbahānī. Other examples include Ismā'īl al-Qāḍī who studied under 'Alī ibn al-Madīnī, and Abū Ishāq al-Ḥarbī who learned directly from Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal. Baghdad functioned as a crossroads for scholars of various schools, evidenced by the relationship between Ibn Surāij and his student al-Ṭabarānī.

⁵⁶ Al-Ziriklī, Al-A'lām, vol. IV:48.

The hadith works originating from Baghdad demonstrate remarkable thematic diversity and methodological approaches. Dominant genres included:

1. Musnad collections like those of Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal, Ismāʿīl al-Qāḍī, and Ibn Mihrān
2. ʿIlal al-Ḥadīth works such as Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal's al-ʿIlal wa Maʿrifat al-Rijāl
3. Gharīb al-Ḥadīth studies exemplified by al-Ḥarbī's work
4. Rijāl criticism including al-Dāraquṭnī's al-Ḍuʿafāʾ and Yaḥyā ibn Maʿīn's al-Tārīkh

Andalusian Scholars and Their Works

Islam first entered Andalusia through the conquest led by Ṭāriq ibn Ziyād and Mūsā ibn Nuṣayr (d. 97 AH) during the reign of Caliph al-Walīd ibn ʿAbd al-Mālīk (86–96 AH). From this point, the transmission of hadith began with the last generation of the tābiʿūn in 92 AH.⁵⁷ Although these tābiʿūn primarily came as military figures, they played a crucial role as bearers of scholarly tradition by teaching the Qurʾān and disseminating the Prophet's hadith. Subsequently, hadith studies advanced significantly through a generation of local scholars who undertook al-riḥlah to the East to study al-Muwaṭṭaʾ directly from Imām Mālīk. In this regard, Ziyād ibn ʿAbd al-Raḥmān al-Shabṭūn (d. 199 AH) is recorded as the pioneer, followed by Yaḥyā ibn Yaḥyā al-Laythī (d. 234 AH). According to Yaḥyā ibn Yaḥyā, Ziyād not only introduced al-Muwaṭṭaʾ but also systematically taught the Sunnah and the study of ḥalāl and ḥarām.⁵⁸

From this point, the introduction of hadith to Andalusia occurred gradually through the contributions of various scholars. Several key figures who played pivotal roles as early transmitters of hadith will be examined in greater depth, including Muʿāwiyah ibn Ṣāliḥ al-Ḥaḍramī (d. 158 AH), ʿAbd al-Mālīk ibn Ḥabīb al-Sulamī (d. 238 AH), Baqī ibn Makhlad al-Qurṭubī (d. 276 AH), and Muḥammad ibn Waḍḍāḥ al-Qurṭubī.⁵⁹

1. Muʿāwiyah bin Ṣāliḥ al-Ḥaḍramī (80-158 AH)

⁵⁷ Al-Ṭabarī, Tārīkh Aṭ-Ṭabarī, ed. Muḥammad Abū al-Faḍl Ibrāhīm (Mesir: Dār al-Maʿārif bi-Miṣr, 1967), vol. VI:468.

⁵⁸ Al-Qāḍī ʿIyāḍ, Tartīb Al-Madārik Wa Taqrīb Al-Masālik Li-Maʿrifat Aʿlām Maḍhab Mālīk, 1st ed., ed. Saʿīd Aḥmad Aʿrāb (Maroko: Wizārat al-Awqāf wa ash-Shuʿūn al-ʾIslāmiyyah bi al-Mamlakah al-Maghribiyyah, 1983), vol. III:117.

⁵⁹ Fierro, "The Introduction of Ḥadīth in Al-Andalus (2nd/8th-3rd/9th Centuries)," 69.

Mu'āwiyah ibn Ṣāliḥ left Syria in 125 AH, traveling through Egypt before finally arriving in Andalusia. 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Dākhil (d. 172 AH) later sent him back to Syria on a political mission, and upon his return, appointed him as al-qāḍī.⁶⁰ In 154 AH, he performed the Hajj while simultaneously narrating hadith in Mecca and Medina, activities that drew the attention of prominent Ḥijāzī scholars such as Sufyān al-Thawrī (d. 161 H).⁶¹

Mu'āwiyah ibn Ṣāliḥ transmitted hadith from several prominent scholars in Syria, including Makḥūl al-Shāmī (d. 112 AH), Rashīd ibn Sa'd (d. 113 AH), Sa'īd ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz (d. 167 AH), and Abū Maryam al-Anṣārī (d. 130 AH).⁶² He also studied under al-Awzā'ī (d. 157 AH), a leading jurist in Syria whose legal methodology (mazhab) he adopted.⁶³ As a transmitter, Mu'āwiyah actively narrated hadith to major scholars such as Sufyān al-Thawrī (d. 161 AH), al-Layth ibn Sa'd (d. 175 AH), Yaḥyā ibn Sa'īd al-Qaṭṭān (d. 198 AH), and 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Mahdī (d. 198 AH), both in Syria and Egypt.⁶⁴ In Andalusia, one of his most renowned students was 'Abd al-Mālik ibn Ḥabīb al-Sulamī (d. 238 AH), who later became a leading Mālikī jurist.⁶⁵ Although he left no written works, Mu'āwiyah was recognized as a prolific hadith narrator. Some of his transmitted hadith can be found in al-Tirmidhī's al-Shamā'il and Sunan al-Nasā'ī.⁶⁶

2. Yaḥyā bin Yaḥyā al-Laythī (152–234 AH)

Yaḥyā ibn Yaḥyā al-Laythī acquired knowledge from several prominent scholars in the Ḥijāz and Egypt, most notably Mālik ibn Anas (d. 179 AH), from whom he directly transmitted al-Muwatta'—except for the chapter on i'tikāf, whose isnād was disputed.⁶⁷ He also studied under al-Layth ibn Sa'd (d. 175 AH), whose legal opinions influenced his divergence from Mālik's views, such as rejecting qunūt in ṣalāt al-subḥ.⁶⁸ During his time in Mecca and Egypt, Yaḥyā learned and transmitted hadith from Sufyān ibn

⁶⁰ Ibn Al-Faraḍī, Tārīkh 'Ulamā' Al-Andalus, 3rd ed. (Kairo: Maktabat al-Khānjī, 1988), vol. II:139; Al-Ziriklī, Al-A'lām, vol. VII:261.

⁶¹ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A'Lām Al-Nubalā', vol. VI:574.

⁶² Al-Dhahabī, vol. VI:573.

⁶³ Al-Faraḍī, Tārīkh 'Ulamā' Al-Andalus, vol. II:138.

⁶⁴ Al-Faraḍī, vol. II:137; Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A'Lām Al-Nubalā', vol. VI:573.

⁶⁵ Al-Ziriklī, Al-A'lām, vol. VII:261.

⁶⁶ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A'Lām Al-Nubalā', vol. VI:575.

⁶⁷ Al-Faraḍī, Tārīkh 'Ulamā' Al-Andalus, vol. II:176; Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A'Lām Al-Nubalā', vol. VIII:517.

⁶⁸ Al-Faraḍī, Tārīkh 'Ulamā' Al-Andalus, vol. II:177.

‘Uyaynah (d. 198 AH) and ‘Abd Allāh ibn Wahb (d. 197 AH).⁶⁹ In Andalusia, Yaḥyā trained a generation of important scholars, including his son ‘Ubayd Allāh ibn Yaḥyā (d. 260 AH), who became his primary transmitter in his later years⁷⁰, Muḥammad ibn Waḍḍāḥ (d. 286 AH) and Baqī ibn Makhḥad (d. 276 AH), who disseminated the Mālikī school⁷¹, and ‘Īsā ibn Dīnār (d. 212 AH), with whom he consolidated the Mālikī school in Andalusia.⁷²

Yaḥyā ibn Yaḥyā al-Laythī undertook his first al-riḥlah to the East in 180 AH to study directly under Imām Mālik ibn Anas (d. 179 AH) in Medina. However, he was unable to complete the entire study of al-Muwaṭṭa’ due to Mālik’s deteriorating health. After attending his teacher’s funeral, he transmitted the remaining material from Mālik’s foremost student, Ibn al-Qāsim (d. 191 AH).⁷³ During his second journey to Medina, he completed the transmission of al-Muwaṭṭa’ from Ibn al-Qāsim, who had documented Mālik’s legal responses.⁷⁴ Furthermore, his scholarly expeditions to Egypt and the Ḥijāz not only enriched his knowledge but also established intellectual networks between the East and West, thereby strengthening the authority of the Mālikī school in Andalusia.⁷⁵

3. ‘Abd al-Mālik bin Ḥabīb al-Sulamī (170-238 AH)

Ibn Ḥabīb’s al-riḥlah to Egypt and the Ḥijāz was pivotal in integrating scholarly networks between the Islamic East and Andalusia. During this journey, he brought back works by Eastern scholars such as Aṣḥabgh ibn al-Faraj (d. 225 AH), enriching the development of the Mālikī school in Andalusia.⁷⁶ However, his travels also sparked controversy, including accusations of taking books from Asad ibn Mūsā (d. 212 AH) without permission and fabricating reports to support his legal views.⁷⁷ Despite this, his scholarly expeditions played a crucial role in strengthening hadith and jurisprudence in the Islamic West.⁷⁸

⁶⁹ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A’Lām Al-Nubalā’, vol. VIII:517.

⁷⁰ Al-Faraḍī, Tārīkh ‘Ulamā’ Al-Andalus, vol. II:178.

⁷¹ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A’Lām Al-Nubalā’, vol. VIII:518.

⁷² Al-Faraḍī, Tārīkh ‘Ulamā’ Al-Andalus, vol. II:177.

⁷³ Al-Faraḍī, vol. II:176; Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A’Lām Al-Nubalā’, vol. VIII:517.

⁷⁴ Al-Faraḍī, Tārīkh ‘Ulamā’ Al-Andalus, vol. II:177.

⁷⁵ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A’Lām Al-Nubalā’, vol. VIII:517.

⁷⁶ Al-Dhahabī, vol. IX:484.

⁷⁷ Al-Dhahabī, IX:486.

⁷⁸ Al-Suyūṭī, Ṭabaqāt Al-Ḥuffāz, 237.

Ibn Ḥabīb began his education under prominent Andalusian scholars, including al-Ghāzī ibn Qays (d. 199 AH), Ziyād Shabtūn (d. 199 AH), and Ṣa'ṣa'ah ibn Salām (d. 192 AH). Around 200 AH, he traveled East to study under the second generation of Mālikī scholars, particularly Mālik ibn Anas's (d. 179 AH) students, such as 'Abd al-Mālik ibn al-Mājishūn (d. 214 AH), Muṭarrif ibn 'Abd Allāh al-Yasarī (d. 220 AH), Asad ibn Mūsā al-Sunnah (d. 212 AH), and Aṣḥab ibn al-Faraj (d. 225 AH).⁷⁹ Upon returning to Andalusia, Ibn Ḥabīb taught prominent intellectuals, including Baqī ibn Makhlad (d. 276 AH), Muḥammad ibn Waḍḍāḥ (d. 286 AH), Yūsuf ibn Yaḥyā al-Mughāmī (d. 259 AH), and Muṭarrif ibn Qays (d. 253 AH).⁸⁰

Ibn Ḥabīb produced significant works in jurisprudence and hadith, including al-Wāḍiḥah fī al-Fiqh wa al-Sunan, Tafsīr Gharīb al-Muwaṭṭa', Gharīb al-Ḥadīth, Kitāb Ḥurūb al-Islām, al-Jawāmi', Faḍl al-Ṣaḥābah raḍiyallāhu 'anhum, al-Masjidayn, Sīrah al-Imām fī al-Mulḥidīn, Ṭabaqāt al-Fuqahā' wa al-Tābī'in, and Maṣābiḥ al-Hudā.⁸¹ Among these, al-Wāḍiḥah is notable for containing unconventional legal opinions within the Mālikī tradition.⁸² However, Ibn Ḥabīb's hadith transmission methodology faced criticism. Scholars noted his laxity in verifying isnāds, as he frequently accepted hadith through al-ijāzah and al-munāwalah without proper scrutiny.⁸³ Critics like Ibn Ḥazm (d. 456 AH) accused him of failing to distinguish authentic from fabricated hadith and making errors in naming transmitters.⁸⁴

4. Baqī bin Makhlad al-Qurṭubī (201-276 AH)

Baqī ibn Makhlad undertook al-riḥlah to the Ḥijāz, Iraq, and Syria in pursuit of knowledge. During his travels, he studied under eminent scholars such as Ibn Abī Shaybah (d. 235 AH) in Kufa and Sufyān ibn 'Uyaynah (d. 198 AH) in Mecca. He successfully brought rare manuscripts back to Andalusia, including al-Muṣannaf of Ibn Abī Shaybah (d. 235 AH) and al-Umm by al-Shāfi'ī (d. 204 AH).⁸⁵ His return marked the beginning of a revolution in hadith studies in Andalusia. Despite opposition from local scholars who were anti-hadith, he received full support from Amīr Muḥammad ibn 'Abd

⁷⁹ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A'Lām Al-Nubalā', vol. IX:484; Al-Suyūṭī, Ṭabaqāt Al-Ḥuffāz, 237.

⁸⁰ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A'Lām Al-Nubalā', vol. XI:485; Al-Ziriklī, Al-A'lām, vol. IV:157.

⁸¹ Al-Ziriklī, Al-A'lām, vol. IV:157; Al-Faraḍī, Tārīkh 'Ulamā' Al-Andalus, vol. I:313.

⁸² Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A'Lām Al-Nubalā', vol. IX:486.

⁸³ Al-Dhahabī, vol. IX:485; Al-Suyūṭī, Ṭabaqāt Al-Ḥuffāz, 237.

⁸⁴ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A'Lām Al-Nubalā', vol. IX:486.

⁸⁵ Al-Dhahabī, vol. XIII:286; Al-Ziriklī, Al-A'lām, vol. II:60.

al-Raḥmān (d. 273 AH), who ordered the transcription of his works. Some Mālikī jurists in Andalusia viewed the hadith collections he introduced as foreign teachings conflicting with their school. However, the Amīr staunchly defended Baqī and mandated the study of his works.⁸⁶

Baqī ibn Makhḥad transmitted hadith from several prominent scholars, most notably Yaḥyā ibn Yaḥyā al-Laythī (d. 234 AH), his primary teacher in Cordoba.⁸⁷ He also studied under Yaḥyā ibn Bukayr (d. 231 AH) and Abū Muṣ‘ab al-Zuhrī (d. 242 AH), two key transmitters of Mālik ibn Anas’s (d. 179 AH) al-Muwatta’.⁸⁸ Although he did not directly receive hadith from Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal (d. 241 AH), he studied his jurisprudential methodology and hadith criticism.⁸⁹ Among his successors, his son Aḥmad ibn Baqī (d. 320 AH) became the primary transmitter of his works.⁹⁰ Other notable students, such as Aḥmad ibn ‘Abd Allāh al-Amawī (d. 330 AH) and ‘Abd Allāh ibn Yūnus al-Qayrawānī (d. 315 AH), played crucial roles in disseminating the hadith tradition across Andalusia and Maghreb.⁹¹

Baqī ibn Makhḥad produced significant works in hadith and tafsīr. His most monumental work, al-Musnad, earned praise from Ibn Ḥazm (d. 456 AH) for its innovative combination of two hadith compilation methods: musnad (arranged by transmitter) and muṣannaf (arranged by theme).⁹² In tafsīr, his Tafsīr al-Qur’ān was regarded by Ibn Ḥazm as superior even to al-Ṭabarī’s exegesis. Additionally, his al-Muṣannaf stood out for its broader coverage compared to similar works by Ibn Abī Shaybah and ‘Abd al-Razzāq, particularly in compiling the legal opinions (fatāwā) of the Companions and tābi’ūn.⁹³

5. Muḥammad bin Waḍḍāḥ al-Qurṭubī (199-287 AH)

Muḥammad ibn Waḍḍāḥ undertook two riḥlahs to the Islamic East. His first journey (218 AH/833 CE) focused on seeking ascetic (zāhid) teachers and spiritual devotion. During this trip, he met luminaries such as Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal (d. 241 AH), ⁸⁶ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A’lām Al-Nubalā’, vol. XIII:287.

⁸⁷ Al-Dhahabī, vol. XIII:286.

⁸⁸ Al-Ziriklī, Al-A’lām, vol. II:60.

⁸⁹ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A’lām Al-Nubalā’, vol. III:287.

⁹⁰ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirah Al-Ḥuffāz, vol. II:151.

⁹¹ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A’lām Al-Nubalā’, vol. XIII:287.

⁹² Al-Dhahabī, vol. XIII:287; Al-Ziriklī, Al-A’lām, vol. II:60.

⁹³ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar A’lām Al-Nubalā’, vol. XIII:287.

Yahyā ibn Maʿīn (d. 233 AH), and Saʿīd ibn Manṣūr (d. 227 AH), though he collected few hadith.⁹⁴ His second riḥlah prioritized hadith collection, during which he studied under scholars like Ismāʿīl ibn Abī Uways (d. 226 AH) in Medina, Ibrāhīm ibn al-Mundhir (d. 236 AH) in Mecca, Ḥārith ibn Miskīn (d. 250 AH) in Egypt, and Saḥnūn ibn Saʿīd (d. 240 AH) in North Africa. In total, he learned from 175 transmitters across Baghdad, Syria, and Egypt.⁹⁵

In Andalusia, his teachers included Yahyā ibn Yahyā al-Laythī (d. 234 AH), ʿAbd al-Mālik ibn Ḥabīb (d. 238 AH), and Muḥammad ibn Khālid al-Ashjaʿī (d. 250 AH). In the East, he studied under Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal (d. 241 AH), Yahyā ibn Maʿīn (d. 233 AH), and Abū Bakr ibn Abī Shaybah (d. 235 AH).⁹⁶ His prominent students —such as Aḥmad ibn Khālid, Qāsim ibn Aṣṣāgh (d. 340 AH), Muḥammad ibn Lubābah (d. 314 AH), and Ibn al-Aʿlā (d. 300 AH)— spread his hadith scholarship throughout Andalusia.⁹⁷

Ibn Waḍḍāḥ authored important works on hadith, asceticism, and theology, including al-ʿIbād wa al-ʿĀbidīn, Risālah al-Sunnah, Kitāb al-Ṣalāh fī al-Naʿlayn, and Kitāb al-Nazar ilā Allāh Taʿālā.⁹⁸ His works emphasized rigorous hadith verification, though his methods drew criticism for allegedly rejecting narrations without thorough analysis. Notably, he was a strict critic who even amended Yahyā ibn Yahyā al-Laythī's (d. 234 AH) transmissions in al-Muwattaʿa upon spotting errors —despite their authenticity— reflecting his preference for personal understanding over literal transmission.⁹⁹ Beyond the scholars discussed above, research has identified other key Andalusian hadith scholars who contributed significantly to the field, as summarized in the accompanying table.

⁹⁴ Al-Faraḍī, Tārīkh ʿUlamāʾ Al-Andalus, vol. II:17; Burhān ad-Dīn Ibn Farḥūn, Al-Dībāj Al-Maḥḥab Fī Maʿrifat Aʿyān ʿUlamāʾ Al-Maḥḥab, ed. Muḥammad al-Aḥmadī Abū An-Nūr (Kairo: Dār at-Turāth li aṭ-Ṭabʿ wa an-Nashr, 1433), vol. II:179.

⁹⁵ Ibn Sālim Makhlūf, Shajarah Al-Nūr Al-Zakiyyah Fī Ṭabaqāt Al-Mālikiyyah (Lebanon: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyyah, 2003), vol. I:113; Al-Faraḍī, Tārīkh ʿUlamāʾ Al-Andalus, vol. II:17-18.

⁹⁶ Makhlūf, Shajarah Al-Nūr Al-Zakiyyah Fī Ṭabaqāt Al-Mālikiyyah, vol. I:113; Farḥūn, Al-Dībāj Al-Maḥḥab Fī Maʿrifat Aʿyān ʿUlamāʾ Al-Maḥḥab, vol. II:179.

⁹⁷ Al-Faraḍī, Tārīkh ʿUlamāʾ Al-Andalus, vol. II:18; Farḥūn, Al-Dībāj Al-Maḥḥab Fī Maʿrifat Aʿyān ʿUlamāʾ Al-Maḥḥab, vol. II:180.

⁹⁸ Al-Faraḍī, Tārīkh ʿUlamāʾ Al-Andalus, vol. II:18; Farḥūn, Al-Dībāj Al-Maḥḥab Fī Maʿrifat Aʿyān ʿUlamāʾ Al-Maḥḥab, vol. II:180.

⁹⁹ al-Qāḍī Abū Bakr ibn Al-ʿArabī, Al-Masālik Fī Sharḥ Muwaṭṭaʿ Mālik (Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-ʿIslāmī, 2007), vol. I:144.

Table 2: Andalusian hadith scholars

Name	Major Works
Yahyā bin Ibrāhīm bin Muzayn (d. 259 AH) ¹⁰⁰	Tafsīr al-Muwatṭaʿ, Tasmiyat al-Rijāl al-Maẓkūrīn fīhi, al-Mustaṣṣiyah, Faḍāʾil al-ʿIlm, Faḍāʾil al-Qurʾān
Abū al-ʿAbbās al-Ghumrī (d. 392 AH) ¹⁰¹	al-Wajāzah fī Ṣiḥḥat al-Qawl bi al-ʿIjāzah
Muḥammad bin Fuṭays bin Wāṣil al-Ghāfiqī (229-319 AH) ¹⁰²	al-Rawʿ wa al-Ahwāl, ad-Duʿāʾ
Ibn Ayman Shaykh al-Andalus (252-330 AH) ¹⁰³	al-Sunan
Abū ʿUmar bin Ḥazm (d.350 AH) ¹⁰⁴	al-Tārīkh al-Kabīr fī Asmāʾ al-Rijāl
Ibn Abī Zamanīn (324-399 AH) ¹⁰⁵	al-Muqarrib fī Ikhtisār al-Mudawwanah, Muntahab al-Aḥkām alladhī sāra fī al-ʿĀfāq, al-Wathāʾiq, al-Maẓhab fī al-Fiqh, Mukhtaṣar Tafsīr Ibn Sallām, Ḥayāt al-Qulūb fī az-Zuhd, Uns al-Murīdīn, an-Naṣāʾih al-Manzūmah
Muḥammad bin Ḥārith al-Khushanī (d. 361 AH) ¹⁰⁶	al-Ittifāq wa al-Ikhtilāf, al-Futyā, Tārīkh al-Andalus, Tārīkh al-ʿIfriqiyyīn, an-Nasab
Abū al-Qāsim bin al-Dabbāgh (325-393 AH) ¹⁰⁷	Musnad Aḥādīth Mālik, Musnad Aḥādīth Shuʿbah, al-Kunā allatī li al-Ṣaḥābah, Aqḍiyat Shurayḥ, al-Khāʾifīn, Zuhd Bishr al-Ḥāfi
ʿAṭīyyah bin Saʿīd al-Andalusī (d.	Tajwīz al-Samāʾ

¹⁰⁰ Al-Faraḍī, Tārīkh ʿUlamāʾ Al-Andalus, vol. II: 178.

¹⁰¹ Al-Ziriklī, Al-Aʿlām, vol. VIII:119.

¹⁰² Al-Dhahabī, Siyar Aʿlām Al-Nubalāʾ, vol. XI:388.

¹⁰³ Al-Ziriklī, Al-Aʿlām, vol. VI:248.

¹⁰⁴ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar Aʿlām Al-Nubalāʾ, vol. XII:191.

¹⁰⁵ Shamsu al-Dīn Al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh Al-Islām Wa Wafiyāt Al-Mashāhīr Wa Al-Aʿlām, 1st ed., ed. Bashār ʿIwād Maʾrūf (Beirut: Dār al-Magrib al-Islāmi, 2003), vol. VIII:807.

¹⁰⁶ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar Aʿlām Al-Nubalāʾ, vol. XII:232.

¹⁰⁷ Al-Dhahabī, vol. XII:544.

407 AH) ¹⁰⁸
Ibn Baṭṭāl al-Qurṭubī (d. 449 AH) ¹⁰⁹	Sharḥ Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī, al-I'tiṣām fī al-Ḥadīth

Al-Riḥlah formed the backbone of hadith transmission. During the 2nd–3rd centuries AH, scholars such as Mu‘āwiyah ibn Ṣāliḥ (d. 125 AH) frequently traveled to Syam and Ḥijāz, a practice that later expanded to Iraq and Egypt in the 3rd–4th centuries AH through figures like Baqī ibn Makhḥad and Qāsim ibn Aṣḥbagh. The objectives of al-riḥlah included seeking direct isnād from teachers in the East—as exemplified by Yaḥyā ibn Yaḥyā al-Laythī’s study under Mālik ibn Anas—collecting rare manuscripts such as al-Muṣannaf of Ibn Abī Shaybah by Baqī, and verifying narrations as demonstrated by Muḥammad ibn Waḍḍāḥ’s cross-referencing with Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal.

The al-riḥlah of Andalusian scholars exerted three major influences. First, it revitalized hadith criticism methodology through Ḥanbalī thought introduced by Baqī ibn Makhḥad, thereby mitigating the rigidity of the Mālikī school. Second, it expanded scholarly networks, as seen in ‘Abd al-Mālik ibn Ḥabīb’s travels to Egypt, which strengthened intellectual ties with students of Mālik ibn Anas like Aṣḥbagh ibn al-Faraj. Third, it sparked tensions between reformist scholars such as Baqī and Ibn Waḍḍāḥ and conservative Mālikī jurists. These shifts reflect the evolution of al-riḥlah from its early concentration in Syam and Ḥijāz (2nd century AH) to a broader scope encompassing Iraq, Egypt, and Qayrawan (3rd–4th centuries AH), primarily aimed at manuscript collection and isnād verification.

Regarding the teacher-student networks in Andalusia, hadith transmission followed a structured, transregional pattern. Yaḥyā ibn Yaḥyā al-Laythī (d. 234 AH) emerged as a central figure in this network. He studied directly under prominent hadith scholars such as Mālik ibn Anas in Medina and al-Layth ibn Sa’d in Egypt, later imparting knowledge to subsequent generations of Andalusian scholars, including Baqī ibn Makhḥad, Muḥammad ibn Waḍḍāḥ, and ‘Īsā ibn Dīnār, who became the core of the Mālikī school in Andalusia. Baqī ibn Makhḥad (d. 276 AH) played a pivotal role in expanding

¹⁰⁸ Al-Dhahabī, vol. XIII:133.

¹⁰⁹ Ṣiddīq Ḥasan Al-Qinnawjī, Al-Tāj Al-Mukallal Min Jawāhir Ma’āthir Al-Ṭirāz Al-‘Ākhar Wa Al-‘Awwal, 1st ed. (Qatar: Wizārat al-Awqāf wa ash-Shu’ūn al-‘Islāmiyyah, 2007), 287.

Andalusia's hadith network by studying under leading Eastern scholars like Ibn Abī Shaybah in Kufa and Sufyān ibn 'Uyaynah in Mecca; his student Qāsim ibn Aṣḥbagh later became an authority in hadith exegesis.

However, this scholarly network faced challenges due to inter-school rivalry. Followers of al-Awzā'ī, represented by Ṣa'ṣa'ah ibn Salām (d. 192 AH) and 'Abd al-Mālik ibn Ḥabīb, ultimately lost influence to the Mālikī faction led by Yaḥyā al-Laythī. Similarly, the Ḍāhirī school promoted by Ibn Ḥazm struggled to flourish amid opposition from dominant Mālikī scholars. Gradually, this network can be categorized into: (1) the generation of Eastern teachers like Mālik ibn Anas and al-Awzā'ī; (2) the first generation of Andalusian scholars, such as Yaḥyā al-Laythī and Ibn Ḥabīb; (3) the hadith critics like Baqī ibn Makhlad and Ibn Waḍḍāḥ; and (4) the exegetes of hadith, including Ibn Baṭṭāl and Qāsim ibn Aṣḥbagh.

In terms of hadith literature in Andalusia, four major trends emerged. First, the writing of commentaries and transmissions of al-Muwaṭṭa' by Imam Mālik, reflecting the Mālikī school's dominance. Examples include Tafsīr al-Muwaṭṭa' by Yaḥyā ibn Ibrāhīm ibn Muzayn and Tafsīr Gharīb al-Muwaṭṭa' by 'Abd al-Mālik ibn Ḥabīb. Additionally, Musnad Aḥādīth Mālik by Ibn al-Dabbāgh (d. 393 AH) further solidified the school's authority. Second, critical studies on hadith transmission methods arose, such as Tajwīz al-Samā' by 'Aṭīyyah ibn Sa'īd (d. 407 AH) on modes of hadith reception and al-Wajāzah fī Ṣiḥḥat al-Qawl bi al-Ijāzah by al-Ghumrī (d. 392 AH) examining the validity of ijāzah. Third, innovations in hadith compilation appeared, exemplified by al-Musnad of Baqī ibn Makhlad, which combined al-musnad and al-muṣannaf methods. Additionally, Sharḥ Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī by Ibn Baṭṭāl became the first commentary on Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī in the Western Islamic world. Fourth, studies in al-rijāl (biographical evaluation) and historiography flourished, as seen in al-Tārīkh al-Kabīr fī Asmā' al-Rijāl by Abū 'Umar ibn Ḥazm (d. 350 AH) and Tārīkh 'Ulamā' al-Andalus by Ibn al-Faraḍī (d. 403 AH).

Conclusion

By highlighting the scholarly complexity of hadith studies while confirming the existence of distinct yet complementary models of knowledge production between Baghdad and Andalusia in pre-5th-century Hijri hadith scholarship, this study reveals significant differences in three key aspects: patterns of scholarly al-riḥlah, structures of intellectual networks, and characteristics of written works. In Andalusia, al-riḥlah exhibited an expansive trajectory, shifting from Syam and Ḥijāz toward the intellectual centers of the East —namely Iraq and Egypt— with the primary objectives of securing strong isnād, acquiring rare manuscripts, and establishing a localized hadith tradition. In contrast, Baghdad’s al-riḥlah model reinforced scholarly authority by leveraging the city’s central position as a magnet for scholars. The teacher-student networks in Andalusia were hierarchical and territorial, heavily centralized around key figures such as Yaḥyā al-Laythī and deeply influenced by the Mālikī school. Meanwhile, Baghdad featured dynamic inter-school networks with continuous scholarly succession across generations—from Shu’bah ibn al-Ḥajjāj to al-Dāraqūṭnī—without hegemonic constraints. In terms of literary output, Andalusia’s hadith works were dominated by sharḥ on al-Muwaṭṭa’, alongside innovations such as Baqī’s al-Musnad. Baghdad, however, produced a more diverse range of genres, including al-musnad, al-’ilal, al-gharīb, and al-rijāl.

References

- ‘Alī Ridā Ballūṭ, Aḥmad Ṭūrān Ballūṭ. Mu’jam Tārīkh Al-Turās Al-Islāmī Fī Maktabāt Al-‘Ālam Al-Makḥṭūṭāt Wa Al-Maṭbū‘Āt. Edited by Dār Al-‘Aqabah. Turki, 2001.
- Ainiyah, Mahfudhoh, and Agus Mahfudin Setiawan. “The Brilliant Legacy of Islam in Andalusia 711–1492: The Influence of Islamic Civilization’s Golden Age on Europe’s Renaissance.” El Tarikh: Journal of History, Culture and Islamic Civilization 5, no. 2 (November 2024): 104.
<https://doi.org/10.24042/jhcc.v5i2.23593>.
- Al-Anbārī, Abū al-Barakāt. Nuzhat Al-Alibbā’ Fī Ṭabaqāt Al-Udabā’. 3rd ed. Edited by Ibrāhīm Al-Sāmarrā’ī. Jordan: Maktabat al-Manār, 1985.
- Al-Bagdādī, Al-Khatīb. Tārīkh Baghdād. Edited by Bashār Iwād Ma’rūf. Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 2002.
- Al-Dhahabī, Shams al-Dīn. Siyar A’Lām Al-Nubalā’. Kairo: Dār al-Ḥadīth, 2006.
- . Tadhkirah Al-Ḥuffāz. 1st ed. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-‘Ilmiyyah, 1998.

- Al-Dhahabi, Shamsu al-Dīn. Tārīkh Al-Islām Wa Wafiyāt Al-Mashāhīr Wa Al-A'Lām. 1st ed. Edited by Bashār 'Iwād Ma'rūf. Beirut: Dār al-Magrib al-Islāmi, 2003.
- Al-Faraḍī, Ibn. Tārīkh 'Ulamā' Al-Andalus. 3rd ed. Kairo: Maktabat al-Khānjī, 1988.
- Al-Fasawī, Abū Yūsuf Ya'qūb ibn Sufyān. Al-Ma'rifah Wa Al-Tārīkh. 1st ed. Edited by Akram Ḍiyā' Al-'Umarī. Baghdad: Maṭba'at al-Irsyād, 1974.
- Al-Qinnawjī, Ṣiddīq Ḥasan. Al-Tāj Al-Mukallal Min Jawāhir Ma'āthir Al-Ṭirāz Al-'Ākhar Wa Al-'Awwal. 1st ed. Qatar: Wizārat al-Awqāf wa ash-Shu'ūn al-'Islāmiyyah, 2007.
- Al-Sakhāwī. Al-I'lān Bi Al-Taubīkh Liman Zamma Ahl Al-Tawrīkh. Edited by Sālim ibn Gatr ibn Sālim Al-Ḍufayrī. Riyāḍ: Dār al-Ṣumai'ī li al-Nashr wa al-Tawzī', 2017.
- Al-Subkī, Tāj al-Dīn Ibn. Ṭabaqāt Al-Syāfi'iyah Al-Kubrā Li Al-Subkī. 2nd ed. Edited by 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Muḥammad al-Ḥulw Maḥmūd Muḥammad al-Ṭanāḥī. Kairo: Hajar li al-Ṭibā'ah wa al-Nashr wa al-Tawzī', 1413.
- Al-Suyūṭī, Jalāl al-Dīn. Ṭabaqāt Al-Ḥuffāz. 1st ed. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyyah, 1403.
- Al-Ṭabarī. Tārīkh Aṭ-Ṭabarī. Edited by Muḥammad Abū al-Faḍl Ibrāhīm. Mesir: Dār al-Ma'ārif bi-Miṣr, 1967.
- Al-Ziriklī. Al-A'lām. 15th ed. Beirut: Dār al-'Ilm li al-Malāyīn, 2002.
- Al-'Arabī, al-Qāḍī Abū Bakr ibn. Al-Masālik Fī Sharḥ Muwaṭṭa' Mālik. Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-'Islāmī, 2007.
- Brown, Jonathan. The Canonization of Al-Bukhārī and Muslim The Formation and Function of the Sunnī Ḥadīth. Leiden: Brill, 2007.
- Farḥūn, Burhān ad-Dīn Ibn. Al-Dībāj Al-Mazhab Fī Ma'rifat A'yān 'Ulamā' Al-Mazhab. Edited by Muḥammad al-Aḥmadī Abū An-Nūr. Kairo: Dār at-Turāth li aṭ-Ṭab' wa an-Nashr, 1433.
- Fierro, Isabel. "The Introduction of Ḥadīth in Al-Andalus (2nd/8th-3rd/9th Centuries)." Der Islam 66, no. 1 (1989). <https://doi.org/10.1515/islam.1989.66.1.68>.
- Ḥibbān, Ibn. Mashāhīr 'Ulamā' Al-Amsār Wa A'lām Fuqahā' Al-Aqṭār. Edited by Marzūq 'Alī Ibrāhīm. Al-Manṣūrah: Ār al-Wafā' li al-Ṭibā'ah wa al-Nashr wa al-Tawzī', 1991.
- Khalīfah, Ḥājji. Sullam Al-Wuṣūl Ilā Ṭabaqāt Al-Fuḥūl. Edited by Maḥmūd 'Abd al-Qādir

- Al-Arnā'ūṭ. Istanbul: Maktabat IRSICA, 2010.
- Makhlūf, Ibn Sālim. Shajarah Al-Nūr Al-Zakiyyah Fī Ṭabaqāt Al-Mālikiyyah. Lebanon: Dār al-Kutub al-‘Ilmiyyah, 2003.
- Manjūyah, Abū Bakr Ibn. Rijāl Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim. 1st ed. Edited by ‘Abdullāh Al-Laysī. Beirut: Dār al-Ma‘rifah, 1407.
- Muflih, Burhān al-Dīn Ibn. Al-Maqṣad Al-Arsyad Fī Zikr Aṣḥāb Al-Imām Aḥmad. 1st ed. Edited by ‘Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Sulaimān Al-‘Uṭaimīn. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Rusyd, 1990.
- ‘Iyād, Al-Qāḍī. Tartīb Al-Madārik Wa Taqrīb Al-Masālik Li-Ma‘rifat A‘lām Maḍhab Mālik. 1st ed. Edited by Sa‘īd Aḥmad A‘rāb. Maroko: Wizārat al-Awqāf wa ash-Shu‘ūn al-‘Islāmiyyah bi al-Mamlakah al-Maghribiyyah, 1983.